Helping shy and fearful dogs build confidence and trust

OUR FY18 ANNUAL REPORT
A Message from Janelle Dixon

This issue of Animal Tracks includes our FY18 Annual Report — and what an incredible year it’s been.

With your support we continue to serve more people and animals than ever before — all while expanding our services, creating innovative new approaches, and charting a bold path forward.

Last year more than 96 percent of the 23,634 animals in our care were placed in homes, reunited with owners, or released to our placement partners. That’s the fourth year in a row our placement rate has exceeded 90 percent. Together we’re saving more lives than ever before.

Your support fuels our innovation. In FY18 we began testing a new model for housing dogs — one that could transform the way shelters everywhere provide care. Our dog habitat prototype in Golden Valley allows dogs to live in groups where they can exhibit a full range of natural behaviors, including socialization and play. What we learn from our prototype will inform our plans for housing dogs moving forward. It’s already shaping how we care for shy and fearful dogs like Sahara, whose incredible story is featured on the cover of this issue.

This is the year we also took new steps to strengthen our commitment to people and pets in underserved communities. Construction began on a new full-service AHS Veterinary Center and community program space on University Avenue in St. Paul. When it opens, this new clinic will help us expand free and low-cost veterinary care where it’s needed most.

We have so much more to celebrate, and you’ll find innovations and accomplishments worth cheering for throughout this issue.

Our work is as vital today as it’s ever been — and your support makes it all possible. On behalf of the animals and people we serve, I extend my gratitude.

Best,

Janelle Dixon, President & CEO
AHS is excited to announce our new video series, Pet Dish TV! These fun, bite-sized videos showcase animals in our care and the incredible work that your support makes possible. They’re also full of useful information for you and your pet — like teaching dog park etiquette and solving litter box issues in cats.

It’s been a busy six months for our humane investigations team.

In May, we assisted the Dakota County Sheriff’s Office in seizing animals from a rural property rented by Caycee Bregel, founder of Minnesota Animal Rescue. Investigators discovered 60 dead cats on the property, and removed a total of 51 living cats, 12 dogs, and one guinea pig. The animals were brought to our Golden Valley shelter where investigators and veterinarians conducted forensic examinations, and staff provided extensive medical and behavioral care. After rehabilitation and treatment, the dogs, guinea pig, and 39 of the cats were placed through our adoption or rescue partner program. Bregel has been charged with 13 counts of mistreatment of animals, including one felony count.

In June, we removed more than 70 horses from a rural Minnesota property. Deputies from the Watonwan County Sheriff’s Office requested assistance from AHS after discovering dead animals and dozens of ponies living in deep mud and manure with overgrown hooves. The hooves — some overgrown 6 to 8 inches — made it difficult for the horses to walk and stand, and reflected months or even years of neglect. The former owner, Michael Johnson, has been charged with three counts of mistreatment of animals.

PETCETERA

AHS rescues dogs, cats, and horses in major humane cases

In August, we worked alongside the Blaine Police Department to rescue 19 dogs and 11 cats from unsanitary and overcrowded conditions in a private home. The animals — including several Lhasa Apso mixes and one Siamese cat — ranged in age from four days old to seniors. The younger animals were generally healthy, while the older animals suffered from health issues including skin and eye infections and severe matting. Three newborn puppies died shortly after arriving at our shelter, but the remaining animals were placed for adoption or with one of our rescue partners.

AHS welcomes two new humane agents

We are proud to welcome two new full-time humane agents to our investigations team.

AGENT ASHLEY PUDAS

Agent Pudas is no stranger to AHS. Before serving as an animal control officer for Minneapolis Animal Care and Control, Pudas worked as a veterinary technician at our Coon Rapids shelter. A lifelong animal lover, she has a German Shepherd and three parrots — some of whom she rescued during her time as an animal control officer. Agent Pudas and Agent Keith Streff oversee the Twin Cities area and southern Minnesota.

AGENT AMANDA OQUIST

Agent Oquist comes to AHS with 15 years of experience in law enforcement, including 12 years as a deputy in the Pine County Sheriff’s Office. She also served as a 911 dispatcher in Pine County and as a police officer in Missouri. Agent Oquist has a passion for all types of animals. She is the proud parent of six children, eight horses, 10 cattle, two goats, a dog, and four cats. Oquist and Agent Wade Hanson are responsible for investigating animal cruelty in the northern half of the state.

The addition of these two new agents will help further our efforts to combat animal abuse and neglect throughout Minnesota.

STOCK DONATIONS

This holiday season, you can give a gift that benefits homeless animals in our community and provides tax savings for you by donating appreciated stock to Animal Humane Society. When you donate stock, you’ll receive its fair market value and avoid paying capital gains taxes. Even better, the proceeds from the sale of your donated stock will go to work immediately to help the animals in our care.

Check out the latest episodes and subscribe at animalhumanesociety.org/petdishtv.

Kindest Cut clinics renamed AHS Veterinary Centers

Kindest Cut clinics have been renamed Animal Humane Society Veterinary Centers. The new name, which took effect in August, reflects the expanded mission of our clinics and will make it easier for people to find, understand, and use our low-cost services.

AHS launched Kindest Cut in 2011 to provide low-cost spay/neuter surgeries for pets of people living in low-income households. The program has since grown, additionally serving pets of military personnel and veterans, and other nonprofit rescue organizations. We’ve also expanded our services, including wellness and preventative care, dental services, and specialty surgeries.

Our veterinary centers include a brick-and-mortar clinic at AHS in Golden Valley and a mobile clinic that offers spay/neuter surgeries in communities across the greater Twin Cities metro area.

Demolition and construction have begun on the future site of Animal Humane Society’s new community program and veterinary center. AHS will occupy the building in phases, with training facilities and program spaces opening in 2019 and a full-service veterinary clinic in 2020.

AHS offers 30 days of free pet insurance for adopters

Every dog and cat adoption at Animal Humane Society includes spay/neuter surgery, vaccinations, parasite treatments, a free collar and ID tag, and a free post-adoption exam with a local veterinarian. Now adopters have one more way to safeguard the health of their pets.

New adopters receive 30 days of free pet insurance through PetFirst. This offer includes 100 percent reimbursement for two incidents (up to $500 each) after a $50 deductible — with no waiting period. This new partnership with PetFirst is just one of the many ways we support adopters along every step of pet parenthood.

AHS has been recognized as a 2018 Top Workplace by the Star Tribune. The designation is based on the results of an employee survey at AHS and more than 600 Twin Cities metro organizations.

"This honor is particularly meaningful because it reflects how our employees feel about AHS," says President & CEO Janelle Dixon. "We’re committed to making AHS a great place to work."

Over the past few years, AHS has worked to improve employee benefits, enhance onboarding and professional development opportunities, and raise our starting wage. We also offer nontraditional benefits like opportunities to interact with animals, pet-friendly workspaces, discounts on veterinary care and pet boarding, and free pet adoption.

"This achievement wouldn’t be possible without the commitment, dedication, and passion that each and every one of our employees brings to work," says Dixon. "The more than 2,000 volunteers who offer their time and support are also a key part of our success."

This year marks the 140th anniversary of Animal Humane Society. To celebrate, we’ve assembled some highlights of the work your support has made possible.

140 years of caring for animals

This year marks the 140th anniversary of Animal Humane Society. To celebrate, we’ve assembled some highlights of the work your support has made possible.

1870s
The organizations that came together over time to form AHS trace their roots back to February 1878, when the Minneapolis Society for the Prevention of Cruelty and the St. Paul Society for the Prevention of Cruelty were established to protect both children and animals from abuse and neglect.

1910s
In the early 20th century, work to protect children shifted to other organizations, and the Minneapolis and St. Paul societies were renamed to reflect their focus on animals.

1920s
The Minneapolis organization — then known as the Animal Rescue League of Hennepin County — opened its first shelter in 1926, funded with a generous bequest from Florence Barton Loring.

1950s
St. Paul Humane Society opened a new shelter on Beulah Lane in 1954. The street leading to the shelter was named in honor of Beulah Bartlett, who led the organization for more than 40 years. The expanded and renovated building is still in use today.

1960s
In 1965, the Animal Rescue League became the Animal Humane Society of Hennepin County and launched plans to build a new 25,000-square-foot shelter in Golden Valley. The new shelter opened in 1967 and was expanded twice in the 1990s.

2000s

Although many things have changed in 140 years, AHS remains committed to engaging the hearts, hands, and minds of the community to help animals. Your support makes it possible.

MODEL BEHAVIOR

Innovations in behavior rehabilitation help shy and fearful dogs build confidence and trust

by Mary Tan

Sahara shook and cowered in a Mississippi animal shelter. For months potential adopters walked by her kennel without stopping to meet her. The shelter was overcrowded and filled with confident, energetic dogs, so the meek, red and white Staffordshire Terrier mix was easy to miss.

She had come to the shelter after roaming the streets of Hattiesburg, Mississippi, picked up by a local animal control officer. When she arrived, shelter staff discovered her collar was embedded in her neck. Volunteers and staff removed the collar and treated her painful, infected wounds.

But Sahara’s emotional wounds were harder to treat. Shelter staff selected Sahara for a transport to Animal Humane Society, where she could get the rehabilitation she needed to prepare for a new life with a loving family.

In July, the 33-pound canine made the 1,100-mile journey to AHS in Golden Valley, where her medical treatment continued. But Sahara exhibited the same behaviors in Minnesota she had in Mississippi — crouching in the back of her kennel, shaking, and burying her head when veterinary technicians attempted to pet her. It was clear she wanted to be invisible to those who came in contact with her.
For the first few days at AHS, Sahara showed no signs of improvement. She didn’t want to leave her kennel, especially when a leash was attached to her collar. Liv Hagen, who leads the behavior modification and rehabilitation program at AHS, knew Sahara needed additional help to overcome her fears.

Hagen embraced the challenge. Last year her team helped more than a thousand dogs and cats overcome behavioral issues in preparation for adoption.

Learning by example

Sahara’s rehabilitation started with daily visits with adoption preparation volunteers. They would spend time sitting with her, hoping to make her feel more comfortable. Still unable to get Sahara out of her kennel, Hagen started spending one-on-one time with her.

At the same time, Hagen was also seeing firsthand how Animal Humane Society’s new group housing prototype was helping dogs with similar challenges.

Opened earlier this year, the habitat prototype houses up to six dogs at a time and includes a shared space for socialization and play as well as individual dens for rest and sleep. “We had wonderful success with some of the shy and fearful dogs we put in that space,” says Hagen. “Spending time playing with other dogs helped them come out of their shells and learn how to relax and be dogs.”

But Sahara wasn’t ready for that kind of environment. “Her behavior was so severe I didn’t think she would do well with the high energy levels in the habitat,” says Hagen.

Then inspiration struck. Hagen and her team were working with two other dogs — Labrador Retriever mixes Chance and Lyla — who were almost as shy and fearful as Sahara. “I thought ‘What if we could create a version of the habitat just for them?’”

The dogs were living in individual kennels in a behavior rehabilitation ward, so introducing them was as simple as opening the kennel doors and allowing them to meet in the corridor. “It was a small space, so there was some concern if they didn’t get along, but the potential rewards outweighed those risks,” says Hagen.

The first to emerge was Chance, who immediately greeted Lyla. The two began playing, but an apprehensive Sahara stayed behind in the safety of her kennel. “Sahara perked up her head, so I knew she was interested,” says Hagen. “The next day we had a magical moment. Chance walked into Sahara’s kennel and coaxed her out. They started to play immediately and soon Lyla joined in the fun.”

It quickly became apparent that Sahara would do whatever Chance and Lyla were doing, so they went to veterinary checks and behavioral sessions as a trio.

After several days of continued rehabilitation and playtime, all three dogs were ready for adoption. All three were adopted within a week.

Hagen was thrilled her idea worked. “Dogs tailor their behavior to meet the needs of other dogs,” says Liv Hagen. “Dogs tailor their behavior to meet the needs of other dogs...”

New beginnings

Sahara, now known as Poppyseed, lives with Carli Lavavich, her adopter, and Roo, another dog adopted from AHS. “When I saw Poppy I knew she would be the perfect companion for my pit bull, Roo, who was also a shy dog when I first brought her home,” says Lavavich. “Poppy follows her younger sister around, and Roo is teaching...”
her how to play and have fun. They’re both such sweet dogs. It’s so fun to be around them and watch them grow,” adds Lavavich. “I have a soft spot for these special animals.”

Chance, now called Molly, lives with the Hennen family, including two young children, two cats, and another dog. “We knew she was shy and fearful and it would take time to work with her, but we also knew she was right for us,” says Fred Hennen. “Everyone in the family is helping her feel protected and loved.”

Molly McCabe came to the shelter to meet another dog she had spotted on our website, but after meeting Lyla, it took only minutes to realize they were perfect for each other. “I knew she was the one,” says McCabe. “I suffer from severe anxiety, so we’re going on a mental health recovery journey together. Lyla is slowly gaining more confidence every day.”

Success stories

Poppy, Molly, and Lyla are not alone. AHS staff and volunteers have helped nearly 15,000 shelter animals through the adoption preparation program, which was created in 1992.

Today, every animal that comes to AHS is assessed by a behavior specialist. “We have specialized programs to address all kinds of behavioral challenges, from cats with litter box issues to dogs who are jumpy, mouthy, and possessive,” says Hagen. She and her team — including more than 40 volunteers and fosters — work with animals for weeks and even months to help them succeed. AHS can successfully address most behavior issues, but a small number of animals experience severe stress that is triggered specifically by the shelter environment. To help those animals, we partner with local rescue organizations who can support animals in long-term foster care. (See page 18 to read more about these partnerships.)

The success of these behavior programs has helped reduce euthanasia dramatically over the past decade, says AHS President & CEO Janelle Dixon. “Investing in expanded behavior programs and advanced medical treatments and partnering with other rescue organizations means we can help even more animals.”

more than 95 percent of the animals who were entrusted to our care last year.”

Dixon is grateful for the community support that makes this intensive, specialized work possible. “We’re learning so much from the habitat about how to help animals. This is just one of many success stories so far — and we’re just getting started.”

The families of Poppy, Molly, and Lyla are excited about the future and what it will bring for their new furry family members. They know there’s a long journey ahead to give the dogs the confidence they need, but it’s all worth it.

It’s worth it for Hagen, too. “I went into this profession wanting to make a difference for animals. These three went from being heartbroken, homeless dogs to family pets who will be loved and cherished for who they are. There’s no better validation than that.”

AHS offers five programs to address behavior challenges:

1. Adoption Preparation
   Geared toward dogs that show signs of stress in shelter, display shy and fearful behaviors, and avoid interacting with people.

2. Possessive Pooches
   Helps dogs who guard food or valued objects such as a pig’s ear, toy, or food bowl.

3. Courageous Kitties
   For owner-surrendered cats with a history of being friendly and social but now display shy or fearful behavior in shelter.

4. Office Cats
   Alternative housing in staff offices to help fearful cats become candidates for adoption.

5. Fresh Start
   For cats with a history of litter box issues.

Kaiser’s previous family had recently moved and were unable to take her along. They thought they had found a new home for their dog with a neighbor, but when they returned for a visit a few months later, they were shocked and disgusted with what they found. Their happy, healthy dog was skin and bones. She was deprived of food and clean water for so long she was nearly unrecognizable. Luckily, they knew they could count on AHS for help.

Nursing Kaiser back to health was a humbling journey. After being starved for so long, Kaiser’s body couldn’t accept food like a healthy dog. Our expert veterinarians planned a careful feeding schedule to delicately introduce food back into her system. Unfortunately, her frail body was susceptible to infections and she became ill with multiple respiratory infections shortly after arriving. But we didn’t give up on Kaiser.

After two months of loving attention and expert care, Kaiser gained 20 pounds and was finally ready to find a new home. Just days later, Kaiser was adopted. Her new family adores her. Whether they are hiking through the mountains together or cuddling on the couch, Kaiser is a member of the family and will never be neglected again.

Kaiser is one of thousands of animals who received the care they desperately needed this year. Second chances like hers are only possible thanks to generous animal lovers in our community. This holiday season you can change the life of an animal like Kaiser.

Give the gift of a second chance today.

When Kaiser arrived at AHS you could see every bone in her body. Weighing only 34 pounds, the skeletal pit bull mix was barely clinging to life. Her big, brown eyes told a heartbreaking story.

AHS and Local Rescue Organizations Team Up to Help Animals in Need

When Charles first arrived at Animal Humane Society, everything was a blur. The 9-month-old terrier mix spent hours on transport from Austin, Texas. He waited his turn as the truck was unloaded. He was weighed, vaccinated, combed for fleas, and given a blue paper collar with his name and ID number.

Charles was led to his new kennel where he’d wait for long-term attention. He needed to get out of the shelter and into the care of a foster-based rescue organization. Charles was enrolled in our Partner Placement program, and within days he was placed with 4 Pits Sake Rescue. Once out of the shelter he immediately started improving. His foster family patiently worked with him, redirecting his inappropriate behavior and teaching him good manners. After two months in foster care, a family spotted Charles and made him one of their own. Now named Sam, this pup found his happy new beginning.

HELPING MORE ANIMALS

Over the past several years, AHS has invested in programs to help animals overcome even the most daunting medical and behavioral challenges. We can now treat a wide array of conditions — from ringworm and parvovirus to broken bones and shy and fearful behavior. Most animals recover and thrive in our care, but some — like Charles — have behavior issues that are triggered or intensified by being in a shelter. Some find the environment so stressful they shut down or display extreme fear and aggression. Others have medical conditions that are difficult to treat effectively in a shelter environment. In these circumstances, AHS recognizes the most compassionate way to help these animals is to get them out of the shelter and into a foster home. That’s why AHS partners with nearly 100 rescue organizations around Minnesota to collectively do the best we can to help each individual animal.

Foster-based rescues are often able to provide a long-term environment that is better suited to animals who struggle in shelter — a quieter, individualized space to help them feel more settled, more comfortable, and more confident. Although AHS has its own foster program, we don’t yet have the capacity to support a foster-to-adopt placement process. Our foster volunteers focus primarily on caring for and rehabilitating animals that will eventually return to the shelter for adoption. Demand for foster care is high, and last year more than 400 AHS foster families cared for nearly 2,500 dogs, cats, and critters.

While AHS guarantees admission to every animal, most rescue organizations — including Feline Rescue — limit admission to select animals. “Because of that, we have the unique ability to take the cats with very special needs,” says Andresen. “That’s our niche.”

Ruff Start Rescue takes in more dogs from AHS than any other rescue partner. “It’s such a big deal for us that AHS works with rescue groups like ours,” says Ruff Start founder Azure Davis. “We’re excited to be able to help the animals who need the [home-based foster] environment we can provide.”

Dana Andresen, executive director of Feline Rescue, is equally enthusiastic. Her organization focuses primarily on rehabilitating cats with special challenges, including those who do poorly in a shelter environment. “More than half of our cats come from animal control and open admission shelters like AHS,” says Andresen.

LAST YEAR, MORE THAN 93 PERCENT OF THE ANIMALS WHO WERE CANDIDATES FOR PARTNER PLACEMENT WERE CLAIMED BY RESCUES OR PLACED THROUGH AN AHS ADOPTION PROGRAM.

A WELCOME CHANGE

Rescue organizations across the Twin Cities have welcomed the opportunity to collaborate.
HOW PARTNER PLACEMENT WORKS
Every day, Nodgaard reaches out to dozens of AHS partners with photos and detailed profiles of animals who are candidates for partner placement. Those rescues have seven days to come in and visit with the animals in order to match them with the right foster homes. This placement process was designed in collaboration with rescue partners. Animals who may be struggling in shelter become candidates for partner placement only after they’ve been assessed and treated by AHS veterinarians and behavior experts.

“Each animal is treated as an individual,” says Anne Johnson, director of shelter support at AHS. “We look at all the options we have to help them succeed in shelter. Ultimately we’re trying to do what’s best for the animal.”

Animals transferred to a rescue partner get the same care from AHS as those who go to adoption, says Johnson. They are sterilized, vaccinated, treated for parasites, and tested for common conditions like heartworm and feline leukemia. AHS also provides a free 30-day supply of any medications the animal needs — even for conditions diagnosed up to 14 days after they leave our care.

If a candidate for partner placement doesn’t receive a commitment within seven days, AHS reevaluates the animal to determine next steps. Last year, more than 93 percent of the animals who were candidates for partner placement were claimed by rescues or placed through an AHS adoption program.

“Sometimes their condition has improved enough that we can work with them in shelter and try to find them a home through adoption,” says Johnson. “Placement as a barn or business cat may also be a good option.” Humane euthanasia is only considered for those who continue to degrade quickly in shelter.

Last year, AHS placed 1,125 animals with rescue partners — roughly five percent of its 22,296 total placements. But for all its success, the Partner Placement program is often maligned and misunderstood.

“There’s a lot of misinformation out there,” says Johnson. “Some people criticize AHS because they think we’ve given up on these animals. They think it’s a death sentence, but nothing could be further from the truth. These animals are candidates because we believe in them and want to help them succeed.”

“PARTNERING WITH LOCAL RESCUES GIVES US MORE OPTIONS TO HELP THESE ANIMALS SUCCEED,” SAYS BRIE NODGAARD.

SHARING RESOURCES
There’s more to these partnerships than simply finding placement for animals. Rescue partners can also bring animals in their care to AHS Veterinary Centers for low-cost spay/neuter surgeries, specialty surgeries, and wellness services. AHS sterilizes about 5,000 rescue partner animals each year. “We’re able to provide veterinary services to them — from vaccinations to amputations — at a greatly reduced cost. That can add up to thousands of dollars in savings a year for each rescue,” says Johnson.

That makes a huge difference for rescues like Ruff Start, says Davis. “Spending less on veterinary care means we can put more into everything else it takes to save animals.”

AHS also shares resources — including donated beds, blankets, and food — with partner organizations.

For Andresen and Feline Rescue, those shared resources include AHS protocols and expertise on topics from shelter medicine to facilities. “That information is invaluable. I believe in not reinventing the wheel — let’s start with something that works already and figure out how to tailor it to our environment.”

In addition, two AHS veterinarians recently began moonlighting as temporary relief vets for Feline Rescue. “They are giving our own veterinarian the chance to succeed in shelter,” says Johnson. “If we’re not engaged and communicating with one another, then we’re doing a disservice to the animals,” says Sarah Cheesman, Pet Haven’s executive director. “It helps to understand where our work overlaps and where we can best support each other.”

Andresen appreciates Animal Humane Society’s efforts to foster trust and transparency through open communication and behind-the-scenes tours. “There’s nothing better than understanding how AHS is being managed and developing relationships with the people who are responsible for making decisions about an animal’s future.”

These partnerships prove the relationship between AHS and local rescues doesn’t have to be contentious.

“Putting judgments and opinions aside, we’re all focused on one greater mission — to save as many animals as we possibly can,” says Camille Bates of Midwest Animal Rescue and Services. “Ultimately, we’ll make a greater impact on the world by working together.”

That spirit of collaboration and partnership is worth celebrating, says Johnson. “We’re really proud of this program and grateful to our rescue partners for everything we’ve achieved together so far.”

CREATING A BETTER WORLD TOGETHER
The Partner Placement program is part of a larger AHS effort to increase collaboration among Minnesota’s animal organizations.

Pet Haven, the state’s oldest foster-based rescue, was among the first to partner with AHS. “If we’re not engaged and communicating with one another, then we’re doing a disservice to the animals,” says Sarah Cheesman, Pet Haven’s executive director. “It helps to understand where our work overlaps and where we can best support each other.”

Andresen appreciates Animal Humane Society’s efforts to foster trust and transparency through open communication and behind-the-scenes tours. “There’s nothing better than understanding how AHS is being managed and developing relationships with the people who are responsible for making decisions about an animal’s future.”

Animal Humane Society continues to advance animal welfare and shape the way animal organizations care for animals and engage their communities.

In fiscal year 2018, we placed more than 95 percent of the animals entrusted to our care. Together we helped 22,296 animals find new homes and served thousands of Minnesota families through free and affordable programs for people and pets.

Adoption and Surrender

AHS helps thousands of dogs, cats, and critters in need find loving homes each year. AHS takes in every animal surrendered regardless of its health, age, breed, or behavior. This commitment to open admission guarantees shelter and care to thousands of animals that would otherwise have no safe refuge.

The success of Animal Humane Society’s shelter program is reflected in three key measures: the total number of animals admitted for rehoming, the percentage of animals with live placements (placement rate), and the average length of stay in shelter. AHS continues to achieve strong results across all three metrics.

* AHS is committed to taking in every animal in need. Unfortunately, some animals come to us with severe or untreatable illnesses or behavior issues that prevent us from placing them in the community. If we cannot help an animal become healthy or suitable for placement, humane euthanasia is the most compassionate alternative. AHS has not euthanized a healthy animal for any reason since 2011. There is no time limit for animals in our adoption centers.
